The latest science on masks

Few months back, the latest Cochrane review, the ultimate in evidence based medicine, concluded from a pool of 78 studies, that face masks had no impact on transmission of respiratory viruses including Covid-19, with the use of medical or surgical masks. Even N95 masks did not offer protection from catching the infection.

A more important question is whether they can harm? A detailed systematic review concluded that they can. The summary of available evidence reveals many harms associated with face masks such as progressive lack of oxygen and build up of carbon dioxide, oxidative stress, constriction of blood vessels, inflammatory response, suppression of immunity, and changes at the organ, cellular and microbiome levels. All these can cause mask-induced-exhaustion-syndrome (MIES) which can be misinterpreted as long Covid.

The evidence of the harmful effects of mask use continues to accumulate. A German study concluded that extended masking can result in mild carbon dioxide poisoning and increase risks of stillbirths, testicular dysfunction, and cognitive decline in children adversely impacting their learning.

Filed in New South Wales Federal Court this week, GP Dr. Melissa McCann of Queensland has been a key organizer and fundraiser driving the lawsuit. She secured over $110,000 via crowdfunding to advance this mass action claiming that the defendants are guilty of negligence due to their approval of the COVID-19 vaccines, as well as breach of statutory
